The Township of Woodbridge New Jersey

Woodbridge Township is the oldest Township in the State of New Jersey, rich in history, and steeped in tradition.

Woodbridge was settled in 1664, but was not granted a Charter until 1669, by King Charles. The original boundaries, set by this Charter of Woodbridge Township, included what we now know today as the communities of Rahway, Carteret, Metuchen, and parts of Edison Township.

Historians believe that our name was derived from the town of Woodbridge, in Suffolk County, England, where many of the emigrants who settled in our community came from originally.

New Jersey's first newspaper was printed in Woodbridge in 1765 by James Parker, and during the Revolutionary War, Woodbridge, by being on the main highway between New York and Philadelphia, was the center of much activity during this era of American history.

In the nineteenth century, clay mining and brick manufacturing were the main industries of the township. In fact the seal of the Township of Woodbridge shows a kiln used to fire the brick, crossed shovel and pick, the main tools used in those days to mine clay, and a ship's wheel, a symbol of the barges used to transport the clay to New York.

Woodbridge, for many years, enjoyed the enviable reputation as an outstanding summer resort for the New York-New Jersey area, with steamers and trains bringing hundreds of vacationers to our community.

But time has changed the face and character of Woodbridge. With the great change in the means of travel, transportation, and modern highways, Woodbridge has in a very short time grown from a sleepy, small-town community to the modern seventh largest community in the State of New Jersey, with more than one hundred thousand residents.

Woodbridge Fire Company No. 1

By Longin W. Marzecki, Historian

In the last quarter of the 1800's, Woodbridge, New Jersey, was a thriving little town with a busy business section, clay mining operations, several docks on the streams leading to the sea and yet, despite these commercial attributes, it was still considered a small farming community.

It had no fire department, no central water supply and no paved roads. However, there was a good neighbor spirit amongst the townspeople and surrounding communities.

In those days, not much could be done to save a house on fire. The primary consideration was the safety of its occupants. Then attempts were made to salvage whatever belongings were near at hand.

In 1887, a fire suddenly engulfed several stores on Main Street between School and Pearl Streets. The bell in the tower of the Methodist Church, across the street from the fire, was rung frantically, warning Woodbridge citizens of the fire, and every able-bodied man rushed to help.

A local hardware store was raided of every pail, and an impromptu bucket brigade stretched from nearby wells to the holocaust. A feed store, grocery store and a barber shop were reduced to ashes. The heroic efforts by the fire fighters were to no avail. Nine years later, the next great fire reduced a busy brick and tile plant to its foundations. Thus it was, in 1897, after much discussion, the leading young men decided to form a fire company. On October 28, a meeting was held in a local hall during which prospective firemen were recruited and officers elected.

Orderly financing was arranged, but there had been some doubt about the legality of the first election. This was resolved, and an initial appropriation of $500 was voted. The expenses were modest enough. The land for the fire house cost only $350, of which $50 was donated by the seller, and a local brewing company was the greatest financial benefactor, with a gift of one hundred dollars.

With the present before them, and the future in mind, the new fire company voted to purchase a hose reel, 400 feet of hose and 12 buckets. Some citizens asked, "Why the reel and hose, when there are no water hydrants or pumps?" However, the organization for fighting fires was set up and ready to go. The men made practice runs, and held fire drills with the hose reel. Later on, an enterprising fireman suggested a better means of locomotion for faster arrivals. A local merchant volunteered the use of his horse and wagon in case of a fire.

When the alarm sounded, he immediately drove to the place where the hose reel was kept, and on his arrival he was joined by several volunteers. They would grab the reel, and sitting on the tailboard of the wagon, they rode away to the scene holding onto the fire equipment. Needless to say, there were a number of humorous incidents, one of which was when the hose reel slipped from the grasp of those on the tailboard and rolled back down Main Street. Firemen and citizens all attempted to retrieve the runaway hose reel, while the merchant turned his horse and wagon around to join in the pursuit. This practice was ended in 1905, when the volunteers obtained a horse and a fire supply wagon.

This original hose reel now stands in honored glory and remembrance on the side of the apron of the present fire house on School Street.

In 1898, a "modern" hook and ladder wagon, drawn either by hand or horse, was added. This was rather thin and fragile when compared with today's fire equipment. However, it was the ultimate in its day. It had several ladders, buckets slung underneath and a single tongue for a pair of horses. The townspeople purposely passed the carriage shed of a local plumber where they gazed at the bright red wagon with pride and approval.

The "hook and ladder" had been designed by Seagrave of Trenton, N. J., and it was first leased, and then purchased by the fire company. It remained in service until 1924.

In 1901 a fire house was built on the site of the present one on School Street, next to Heard's Brook. A steel locomotive wheel tire was hung in the tower as the alarm system. A far comparison to today's highly audible air horn (which is mounted on the roof of the firehouse), which signals a fire, and the home alarm radio alerting system, whereby every fireman has a radio receiver, which is activated from the base radio at fire headquarters, which transmits the location of the fire call.

Behind this structure on a street facing the railroad yard was a stable that housed the fire horses. The original team of "Tom and Harry" worked together for years. When the alarm was sounded, they pawed and kicked until someone released them from their stalls. Straight as an arrow they ran through the willow woods to the fire house and assumed their places. They waited impatiently as the harnesses were attached, and every once in awhile turned their heads as if to say, "Stop stalling, we've got to get going!"

As firemen even today have certain duties to perform in the station during quiet periods, so did Tom and Harry. They did coach work and pulled hearses at extra-elegant funerals. A tale handed down through the generations about these horses goes something like this.

While in a solemn procession, pulling a hearse going up Main Street, the fire alarm sounded. Tom and Harry immediately picked up their ears, snorted and started to run. They left the procession with the mourners startled at their antics. The fire horses made a sharp turn with two wheels in the air, and headed for the fire house. They arrived ready for duty with the hearse and its contents, just about falling out through the back door.

Later "Tom and Harry" were replaced by "Buddie and Buster," who remained in part-time fire service until their stable burned down, and these fine animals were lost in the fire.

Woodbridge Fire Company No. 1, was one of the first volunteer units in the State of New Jersey to obtain motorized fire apparatus. In December, 1914, the Perth Amboy Garage was contracted to build a special Willys-Overland utility truck.

It had no pump but carried hose, chemicals and 12 firemen. The truck was commissioned on April 12, 1915, and remained in service for five years. It was called a "bucking bronco" due to its unusual performance. When four or more firemen stood on the Woodbridge is an ever growing progressive community, with constant changes that truly make it the "All American City" it was named a few years past.

Jeremiah Dally, an early historian of Woodbridge, truly must have been a man of vision, when he wrote in 1873: "If we could play Rip Van Winkle, and open our eyes on the village two hundred years from now, doubtless, we should see more wonderful changes."

The Free Public Library of Woodbridge calls upon all persons to please aid its Historical Society.

This library group is trying to obtain pictures, stories, and other items that would help in the compiling of the individual histories of the different civic, fraternal, religious and the emergency service groups of Woodbridge Township.

The group suggests that, if you do not wish to donate items to the library, you lend them to the library for a few days, so they may have the opportunity to reproduce them, and thus the Historical Society will, by gathering up all the many different items, be able to piece together the whole story in order to leave a legacy for generations of new citizens of Woodbridge, in the many years to come.

rear platform, the front end was lifted into the air, thereby nullifying the steering qualities. The positive contribution from shifting weight toward the rear was for dodging the muddy potholes by the forward wheels.

It had solid rubber tires and the wheels were chain-driven. At night, the forward end was illuminated by two carbide lamps, and the rear was marked by two red kerosene lanterns.

The transition from horse-drawn to motorized power was vehemently resisted by the "old-timers." Their finest arguments pointed to the human-like qualities of animals plus horse sense. Grudgingly, they admitted that the "motor trucks" were putting "old Dobbin" into pasture.

Of course, they did have a few last laughs as they pulled out of the firehouse with their horses, while the "new-fangled machine" wouldn't start, despite constant cranking by hand. No doubt their greatest glee came when a team of horses had to be hooked up to the stalled machine to pull it to the scene of the fire.

In 1922, a modern 750-gallon per minute American LaFrance pumper was purchased, which was delivered to Woodbridge in a railroad box car. A short time after this combination chemical pumper was in service, the Willys-Overland apparatus was sold to a fire company in the township. As a note of interest, the original LaFrance was overhauled in 1935, and the chemical tank was replaced with a 60-gallon booster tank.

In 1924, a White hook and ladder truck with a complete double set of equipment was bought. In 1925, a new American LaFrance combination booster-pumper was purchased, and about ten years later a Ford emergency truck was hand-built by the volunteer firemen from a used chassis. This was loaded with every possible modern device of the day, and was used for many types of emergency calls besides fires.

In 1941, two new apparatus were delivered by the American LaFrance Company. One was a 750 gpm pumper, and the other a seventy-five foot aerial ladder which did double-duty at the train disaster in 1951. Then in 1953, Engine #5 (750 gpm-TASC), was purchased to augment the growing need for additional fire equipment.

Woodbridge Fire Company — 1911

Eight years later, as the demand for new homes swept the nation, Woodbridge was caught up in the building boom, and with the need for improved fire protection, Engine #6 (1000 gpm-TASC) was purchased in 1961, and Engine #7 (1000 gpm-TASC) was obtained in 1967.

After almost thirty years of service, the 1941 aerial ladder was replaced in 1971 with a 100-foot American LaFrance, rear-mounted aerial ladder.

Although the original firehouse had been expanded in 1937, it became outmoded, and so it was on the morning of October 4, 1967, the wrecking ball began its job of knocking down the old to make way for the new Colonial style structure.

Twenty months later, on May 18th, 1969, the present building was dedicated. The new firehouse contains five bays, a meeting and recreation room, a dormitory, fire prevention office, and a watch desk room.

It must be noted that the fire company is responsible for the protection of Woodbridge proper and Sewaren section of the Township, with its petroleum tank farms, dock facilities, chemical storage and distribution points, commercial and residential areas, and high-rise buildings, and also the large sprawling Woodbridge Center complex, which comprise Fire District Number 1, of Woodbridge Township.

Over the years, Woodbridge Fire Company, which is made up of two divisions, the Engine and the Truck, with an overall complement of 65 volunteers, has responded to a variety of calls: from rescuing an animal in a tree, to a small child in a burning building; from an oil fire to a train disaster; and from a house fire to an industrial or commercial fire.

Large or small as the emergency may be, the men of Woodbridge Fire Company No. 1, today, as in the past, respond to the "call" for the protection of life and property.
